Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of self-reported depression between men and women who had been exposed to violence by intimate partners. Data from the National Longitudinal Study of Women's Health are used. Results show that among those who have ever been married, 10% of men and 16% of women reported having experienced physical or sexual violence by their current or former spouse or partner. Among those who had been exposed to violence, 18% of men and 27% of women reported being depressed. These results suggest that exposure to violence by intimate partners is associated with higher rates of self-reported depression among women than among men.
